UNION MEN ARE IN CONVENTION

Labor are carried on until all unorganized workers are in the ranks. The hope is that the organized workers of the state that organization is the sure means of assuring their protection and furthering their well being. Textile mills and the marble industry are mentioned as the next citadels to be conquered by organized labor. It is stated that several attempts have been made to organize upward of 4,000 workers in the Vermont marble industry and that efforts will continue until the work of the labor men is crowned with success.

The report goes on to say: "It is particularly necessary at this time to increase and strengthen organization. We are in a critical period, when at any time the forces of readjustment may grip the unprotected workers in the merciless clutches of an industrial crisis. We must prepare against the change in industrial currents that shall surely follow the ending of the present European war. Only through organization can workers protect themselves against the forces to make them bear the brunt of industrial depression and readjustment. Through organization, the wage-earners can assert their rights, maintain American standards of life and have a voice in determining industrial conditions."

The president continues by saying that much work remains to be done in the legislative field before Vermont can be classed among the leading states for favorable labor legislation. It states that the past two sessions of the general assembly, however, have been marked by more progress in that direction than in all previous ones and that but for the deplorable situation in Barre last spring while the legislature was in session, measures requested and asked for by organized labor might have received more favorable action.

To the workmen's compensation law President Suitor refers as being the most important piece of labor legislation, although the compensation is too low and the schemes of insurance are not right. The author of the report states his belief that the full benefits of a compensation law will never be fully realized by employers and workmen until there is a state fund for insurance. Considerable space is devoted in the report to a technical discussion of the law now in force and other phases of legislation for laboring men.

Referring to the situation in Europe, the president says: "Organized labor bodies all over the country have been adopting strong resolutions against the European slaughtering game or intervening in the Mexican trouble. I believe we should take our stand also and show by resolutions where we stand in Vermont. We should also join in labor's protest against the conviction of John R. Lawson, Colorado district officer of the United Mine Workers, because we do not believe his trial was fair."

Suitor speaks briefly but to the point of the clerks' situation in Barre. In closing, he pays tribute to the legislators and others who worked in behalf of labor during the last general session.

Labor Organization During Past Year. During the year, according to the annual report of Secretary Alexander Ironside, the barbers of Burlington and the stage employees of Rutland have affiliated with the state federation. Invitations were sent to others. It is urged that the next convention of the American Federation of Labor will make it mandatory that every local be authorized to join its respective state federation. Labor men are urged to accord the union label better support. Says Mr. Ironside: "I have gone to merchants in my home town and induced them in many instances to give union made products the show they deserve. The merchants at the same time have told me there is practically no demand and that only a few idealists are agitating the same."

Various means of advertising the union label are advocated by Secretary Ironside, who continues his report by referring with a keen sense of analysis to some of the labor accomplishments of the 1915 legislative session. Among other matters not mentioned in the legislative report, reference is made to the law requiring the heating of street car vestibules.

Legislative demands to be made by the agents of organized labor are tabulated as follows: Widows' pension fund; one day's rest in seven; 54-hour law in mechanical and mercantile industries; a woman deputy added to the factory inspection staff; that the workmen's compensation bill be so amended that for so long an amicable settlement. Referring to some of the happenings while the strike was in progress, the secretary says: "If these are the tactics the element intends to keep going in Vermont, as it has done in Rutte, Paterson and Lawrence, the day does not seem to be far distant when the workers of Vermont will be confronted with a compulsory arbitration bill which will do injury to them and us alike."

Turning to the clerks' situation in Barre, the secretary strongly commends the members of the retail clerks' union for the determined stand they have made and speaks of the united support which labor organizations in Barre are according the clerks. In closing, Mr. Ironside takes occasion to thank all who have assisted the organized labor movements in Vermont and urges upon his hearers the necessity for continuing the good work so well begun.

TWO NEARLY DROWNED. Girl Fainted When She Was Taken Ashore at Malletts Bay.

Winoski, Aug. 10.—Roy Chase and Anna Mae Flint, sister of John Flint, had a narrow escape from drowning at Malletts bay shortly before noon Sunday. John Flint, who was out rowing with his wife, jumped into the water and brought his sister to shore. The accident happened when Miss Flint was getting from a rowboat into Chase's motor boat anchored at the dropoff in about 15 feet of water. Miss Flint tipped the row boat over and let both herself and Chase into the water. Miss Flint could not swim and Chase was about exhausted when relieved by Miss Flint's brother, who grabbed her and brought her to where they could touch bottom and walk to shore. When brought safely to shore, Miss Flint lost consciousness, but was revived. Miss Flint is visiting at the camp, having come here recently from the West.
